Stemilt's Washington apricot crop has promotable volume, increased size

Stemilt's Washington apricot crop will bring big fruit this year. Apricots are back mid-June through July with promotion windows starting July Fourth onward. Brian Evans, Stemilt senior sales manager, anticipates quality and size will increase during this year's apricot season and shares how retailers can promote apricots mid-June. "We'll have good volume and sizes of Artisan Organics apricots this year which means now is the perfect time to prepare for upcoming promotion windows," said Evans. "We're seeing signs of strong cell division post bloom which shows improved quality and size from the previous crop."

Great flavors are made when cool nights and long, hot days give apricots the perfect balance of sweetness and tartness. The Douglas family grows all Stemilt's apricots, peaches and nectarines 100 percent organically in Pasco, WA, in the Columbia Basin. The natural rain shadow in this area makes an optimal location for growing stone fruit. Each year, the family is committed to using only the best practices to pick fruit at just the right stage of ripeness for the best flavor, quality and size.
