California Strawberry Commission shares update on devastation from river flooding

California Strawberry Commission President Rick Tomlinson has issued a statement about recent flooding in areas around the Pajaro and Salinas Rivers.

The commission represents over 300 strawberry farmers, shippers and processors in the Golden State. In response to the extreme weather events, Tomlinson made the following comments in a statement:

This week's flooding events along the Pajaro and Salinas Rivers have been devastating for those communities. Preliminary assessments estimate hundreds of millions in losses and thousands of people displaced in the town of Pajaro. The entire California strawberry industry would like to thank the first responders, aid organizations and volunteers who have helped begin the long recovery process. We are thankful that the Pajaro River levee breach is being repaired. Stopping the river from flowing into the community is the first priority. This is a good start toward a safer place to live, raise a family, and work. The foreseeable future will be challenging. Families will work to restore their homes, their jobs, and many other aspects of their lives. Farms face a massive cleanup. As soon as the cleanup is complete, farmers will begin the process of preparing the fields and starting over.
