Southern Specialties forecasts solid asparagus sector growth

Southern Specialties, which sources asparagus from several regions, utilizes its Peruvian production as a consistent year-round supply to service both foodservice distributors and retailers in the population dense East Coast.

“Peru offers year-round production that lends itself well to more stable programs,” said Carlos Solf, the firm’s vice president of procurement. “Both retailers and growers can find value in educating consumers and promoting Peruvian asparagus. We will work closely with our retail partners to maximize opportunities during the October to December period. We expect there may be promotable volume around mid-November when Peru and Mexico have asparagus volume at the same time.”

This season the company, which is headquartered in Pompano Beach, FL, is anticipating a 5-10 percent increase in production, as higher yields per acre have been noted from the early season harvest. “The fields are producing more than after the last El Nino that ended in May of 2024,” Solf said, adding that fewer farmers are replanting asparagus fields due to the high costs. “Tariffs are an additional cost that will be a burden for the entire industry.”
