La Niña Watch Is On — Here's How It Could Shake Up Drought and Winter Weather

The Climate Prediction Center says there's a 71% chance of La Niña conditions developing from October through December, while also issuing a La Niña Watch. However, one meteorologist expects La Niña to make a quick exit.

Farmers across the U.S. are gearing up for a potentially volatile winter as the National Weather Service has placed the country under a La Niña Watch. But what does that really mean for the months ahead? Eric Snodgrass, principal atmospheric scientist for Nutrien Ag Solutions, says this winter's pattern could be one to watch closely.

Weather Highlights from Now Through December:

Expect an early-peaking La Niña, with the strongest impacts likely around Christmas.

Look for cold, snowy conditions in the north and dryness in the south.

Watch for frequent Arctic intrusions and an active Ohio Valley storm track.

Recharging soil moisture before freeze-up is critical, especially in the Midwest.
