Yields expected to pick up after slow start in southern Texas

A long, hot summer followed by an early fall freeze threw grower-shippers a curveball at the start of the fall season in southern Texas, but they're hopeful things will straighten out by mid-December. Unseasonably warm temperatures delayed the harvest of green bell peppers and green and red cabbage in the Winter Garden/Laredo region for Uvalde, Texas-based Cargil Farms Produce, said Nano Tafolla, sales manager.

Yields from the early fields were lighter than usual, but movement should be back to normal by mid-December, he said. Lighter volume was not limited to Cargil Farms. "Every grower is in the same boat," Tafolla said. Cargil Farms will have bell peppers through December and will ship cabbage until June or early July.
