Volume drop expected for Florida citrus, but quality remains good

How much of an impact major hurricanes and storms have had on this season's crop remains to be seen. Florida citrus volume will be down this season compared to last year because of some major hurricanes and storms. Exactly how much of a drop there will be remains to be seen. Category 3 Hurricane Milton, which made landfall in Florida on Oct. 10, passed through nearly 70% of the state's most productive citrus counties, said Matt Joyner, executive vice president and CEO of Bartow-based Florida Citrus Mutual.

"The timing of the storm just before harvest made the fruit highly susceptible to the strong winds, causing substantial fruit drop and damaging trees," he said. During the 2023-24 season, Florida's citrus growers produced 17.97 million boxes of oranges, 1.79 million boxes of grapefruit and 450,000 boxes of tangelos and tangerines for a total of about 20.2 million boxes — an increase from 15.85 million boxes during the 2022-23 season, according to Citrus Mutual.

USDA's first crop estimate of the 2024-25 harvest season released Oct. 11 forecast 15 million boxes of oranges, 1.4 million boxes of grapefruit and 400,000 boxes of tangerines and tangelos — a total of 16.8 million boxes. However, the estimate was released before Hurricane Milton made landfall. Future forecasts are expected to reflect a reduction in production.
