THE PRODUCE NEWS

How companies are connecting with the organic consumer With younger shoppers driving sales growth for the category, produce businesses have multiple ways to stand out at retail.

Sales of organic produce were up 5.1% for the 52-week period ending Feb. 23, according to data from market research company Circana. Increases were the largest in the categories of tropical and specialty fruit (21.8%), mixed vegetable kits (16.3%) and cruciferous vegetables such as broccoli and cabbage (13.6%).

Organic produce sales have been rising for years, said Jonna Parker, Circana's vice president of fresh foods. In 2019, they accounted for 11.5% of produce sales in the U.S., and they now constitute 12%.

"Demand for organic produce has been steadily growing, driven by a growing interest in health, sustainability and food quality," said Kristina Garris, executive director of fresh for Bashas' and Food City, a division of The Raley's Cos., Chandler, Ariz.
