Taylor Farms Pulls Iceberg Lettuce From Central Mexico Linked to U.S. Parasite Outbreak

Taylor Farms says no Taylor Farms-branded salads or kits are tied to the outbreak after the FDA said its traceback investigation identified a single supplier of iceberg lettuce from Mexico used by Taco Bell locations where people ate before becoming ill.

Taylor Farms, a California-based lettuce supplier, is removing all iceberg lettuce sourced from central Mexico, the company said in a statement on Friday, as it seeks to curtail a foodborne illness outbreak that could become one of the U.S.'s largest in recent years. The company said it was doing so based on information provided on Thursday by the U.S. Food and Drug Administration. The company added in its statement that no Taylor Farms-branded salads or kits are associated with the cyclosporiasis outbreak, and that no Taylor Farms-branded salad kits contain iceberg lettuce.

An industry source who requested anonymity because they were not authorized to speak to the media told Reuters that Taylor Farms called clients on Thursday, including Taco Bell owner Yum Brands and food distributor Sysco, to pull their shredded lettuce from distribution. The lettuce, which the FDA said late on Thursday came from Mexico, was produced as 5-pound bags at Taylor Farms' facility in Guanajuato, Mexico, the source said, adding that Sysco widely distributes such bags to hospitals, ballparks and fast-food chains.
