As potato sales volume rises, growers optimistic about 2025 crop

Total grocery store fresh potato sales were up 3% last year to about 4.8 billion pounds, according to Potatoes USA.

U.S. potato growers continue to ship a strong 2024 crop out of storage as the year progresses, and they anticipate an equally solid crop for 2025. According to Denver-based Potatoes USA, total grocery store fresh potato sales were up 3% last year to about 4.8 billion pounds. Dollar sales were down about 5%, however, to just over $4 billion.

Russet potatoes were the top-selling variety, accounting for 64% of potato sales, followed by yellow (16%), red (11%) and white (4%). "The crop this year was beautiful," said Ross Johnson, vice president of retail and international for the Eagle-based Idaho Potato Commission.

Sizing was larger than usual, he said, but many retailers were able to use the larger-profile potatoes to increase their bulk potato sales or introduce an 8-pound jumbo bag option. Growing and harvest conditions also were excellent, said Coleman Oswald, director of sales for Idaho Falls-based Eagle Eye Produce.
