Has Ag Labor Finally Achieved a Market Wage?

Attorney Shawn Packer shares how regulatory changes are affecting ag labor, compliance requirements and operational risks.

Ahead of the National Watermelon Association's Annual Meeting and Convention in St. Pete Beach, Fla., Feb. 18-21, The Packer spoke with attorney Shawn Packer, a panelist on the keynote session, "Agriculture Labor — Policy, Compliance and Innovation." Packer is set to share how regulatory changes are affecting ag labor, compliance requirements and operational risks.

With the H-2A Adverse Effect Wage Rate interim final rule published in October this past year and USDA's suspension of the Farm Labor Survey, from which the AEWR was previously calculated, Packer says there's a lot in flux, but there's also reason for optimism. "At the end of September, USDA published a final notice that they are no longer conducting the Farm Labor Survey, which, for decades, has been the primary mechanism to determine wages," he says. "And that left a bit of a black hole situation."
